"Growing up with a discontinuous sense of home and language, I became a vessel of conflicting interpretations, with only my memories as an impermanent anchor. I was in constant negotiation with my own words, striving to weave them into a continuous narrative. But through translation meaning is lost, words cease to exist, histories misunderstood and wordless memories we are forced to forget."

Sun's interdisciplinary works invite you to interpret the metaphorical language of painting in an expanded field. She interweaves painting, textiles, calligraphy, embroidery, and written text with the weightless waves and abstract codes of digital technology to explore the connotations embedded within these elements. Collectively, they form a psychological landscape where we re-route meaning and navigate between fragments that exert opposite gravitational pulls. Sun investigates the ruptures in language, syntax, and perspective to invalidate and recreate the process of interpretation.
